Is online shopping the RIGHT FIT?

GETTY IMAGES FILE

Reuters

Technology finally may be solving the thorny problem of buying clothing online—that you cannot try things on. Through scanners and data mining, consumers are now able to get a custom fit, saving them time and money because they do not have to order multiple items and return what doesn't fit.

The majority of these new systems do not cost a thing for the buyer to use. They are more about recommending an exact sizing and style than if the customer tries to pick an item on their own.

Given that the average woman has $550 worth of unused clothing in her closet, according to a recent survey by vouchercloud.net, a retail coupon site, shoppers could use a little help paring down their purchases to things they actually like and will wear.

Called Swivel HD, FaceCake's virtual try-on system works with Microsoft's Kinect 2 to project clothing onto users as though they are looking in a mirror. Users stand about two feet away and hold out their hands as if they are grabbing products off a rack. If you bend with a virtual purse on, the strap bends with you so you can see how it fits your body contours.

"You don't have to tell it anything," FaceCake CEO Linda Smith said.

This creates cost savings in various ways. For starters, buyers can view clothes in an ensemble more easily, and get a better idea of how those clothes look against their skin tone. Another feature lets users share photos of their potential choices via social media, so buyers can get input before making purchases.

TRUE FIT
truefit.com

Software built for retailers, True Fit works with more than 1,000 brands like Michael Kors and Sean John. Shoppers can create a new profile in 60 seconds or less by entering their height, weight, body type and size of their favorite dress instead of traditional measurements. The technology then analyzes billions of data points to make clothing recommendations; the more a person uses it, the more True Fit "learns" about what works for them.

"It helps us zero in on some things that fit them in real life," co-founder Romney Evans said. "We also look at past sales information so we can get smart about a recommendation. It's really an ongoing conversation with customers, and those conversations will get better with time."

Still measuring

Some technologies do use measurements.

ME-ALITY
me-ality.com

At Me-Ality's website customers can input four simple measurements to get clothing recommendations.

us.leftshoecompany.com

The Left Shoe company could finally make the Brannock Device—the metal plate with sliders that has measured shoe sizes since 1927—a thing of the past. At the West Hollywood-based store, customers stand on a platform while a high-resolution camera rotates around each foot on a circular track, taking 300 total images in 40 seconds.

As of now, this kind of fitting can't be done via the Web, but Left Shoe store co-owner Patrick Mayworm says a mobile-based system is coming.

At Stitch Fix it takes about 10 minutes to complete a profile that addresses size, style, shape and lifestyle—as well as your shopping budget. A personal stylist then picks five items for you. It costs $20, but that amount applies to paying for the clothes you keep. If you keep all five, you get a 25 percent discount; if you return any, there are no restocking fees and Stitch Fix pays the postage.

The average spend per item is $55, which "is very similar to retailers like the Gap," Stitch Fix founder and CEO Katrina Lake said. "They're also saving money that they would otherwise spend on gas to get to the mall, or on shipping and returns for online purchases," she adds.

Social media shopping

You can get recommendations via social media from companies like Zappos. All you have to do is type #nextootd on your Instagram postings and they'll respond to you based on your user profile. And starting in June, Zappos also will offer #askzappos, where you can snap a picture of an outfit you like and get help finding out where to buy it.

Problem with my crop top? Get lost

Kate Conway

» @katchatters

My favorite thing about this summer, besides being able to walk home half-drunk without my fingers getting frostbite, is the knowledge that I'm probably horrifying at least a few people simply by wearing a crop top.

Like most women who have ever looked at a magazine ad at any point in their lives, I can be pretty insecure about my body. It bums me out to think about how much energy I've put into battling the discomfort that perennially lurks beneath my skin. If it weren't for trying to live up to unrealistic beauty standards, maybe I could have written the next Great American Werewolf Novel by now, you know?

And this is where the crop top comes in.

A few months ago, I absentmindedly bought a shirt at a Betty Who concert. In my excitement, I didn't realize that it showed a strip of my stomach until I threw it on the next morning. When I saw the little pudge-window, my first response was, "Great, now I'm going to have to give it away."

Then I paused. Why, I thought, was I going to throw out a baby-soft shirt bearing the name of an artist I love (that I had paid way too much money for)? Sure, I was a little self-conscious about my belly, but what was the worst that could happen? If somebody didn't like it, that was their problem, not mine.

For possibly the first time ever, I was confident wearing something that traditionally wouldn't be "acceptable" for my body type. And it felt rad as all hell.

Too often, people—women, in particular—fall into the trap of believing it's our job to make sure others are comfortable with our appearances. The media constructs an aesthetic expectation for us, and it becomes our responsibility to conform to "rules" for our outfits that will ensure no one ever has to remember that most people really don't look like Zoe Saldana or Emma Watson. The public's perceptions of those women, after all, are essentially fictional, or at least created from filters of tabloids and Photoshop. The average person basically can treat them like a character in a novel.

So when in-the-flesh women don't fit these generally unattainable molds, they remind others that they're real humans, not just objects of lust or disdain. And that makes some people mighty uneasy, or even aggressive. I've had dudes inform me on the street that my thighs have too much cellulite for me to be wearing short shorts, for example, and even other women have gently told me that I should steer clear of halter tops, with shoulders like mine.

And you know what? Screw 'em.

If wearing something more revealing than usual makes you feel hot, or relaxed, or even a little less like peeling your own skin off in this weather, then wear it. And if seeing you in it makes other people stress out, that's their concern. Strut your stuff and get to working on that zombie book.

HORSESHOE

The 2002 "Real World" house is now a Cheetah Gym (below), but during filming in 2001 was a tricked out apartment for seven strangers (left, right).

About to get Real (again)

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

It's summer in Chicago. Expect steamy hookups, heated arguments and simply one hot mess.

Especially if MTV films "Real World" in the Windy City this summer.

RW Productions got city zoning approval in June to set up a seven-bed temporary residence in the two-story building that once housed the Bon V nightclub in the West Loop.

The Chicago Tribune has reported that filming likely will begin in August for 12 weeks. But when contacted RedEye, MTV said it "can't confirm anything at this time."

The last time MTV came to Chicago was Summer 2001, when cameras followed the roommates inside their Wicker Park loft while residents outside protested the neighborhood's gentrification. Viewers watched the cast go to Northalsted Market Days, ride the "L," work at Humboldt Park and Daley Plaza and react to the 9/11 attacks. MTV showed off the city in scenic shots of the lakefront, Michigan

THE BUILDING

Then: The Wicker Park building at 1934 W. North Ave. was once home to neighborhood hangout Urbis Orbis cafe. It was converted to a loft for the show. Currently, it is a Cheetah Gym located across the street from Piece Brewery and Pizzeria.

Now: RW Productions has received zoning approval of a special-use application for the building at 1100 W. Randolph St. (left) that used to house Bon V, a nightclub partly owned by Casey Urlacher, brother of former Bear Brian Urlacher.

gan Avenue and the Hancock Center.

Much has changed since the Chicago season aired in 2002. Chicago got a new mayor. Sen. Barack Obama became president. Millennium Park opened. The Sears Tower was renamed the Willis Tower. The White Sox won the World Series. The Hawks won the Stanley Cup twice.

The show aired before the smoking ban, legalized gay marriage, the second Iraq war, iPhones, Facebook and even RedEye.

RedEye rewinds to the 2001 season, brings you up to speed on the show's new Chicago neighborhood and suggests some jobs for the Chicago cast.

LIVIVANCO@TRIBUNE.COM | @LIVIVANCO

The neighborhood

Then: By the time "Real World" came to Wicker Park, it was a neighborhood in the midst of gentrification. The gritty, affordable, artistic community was transitioning into a neighborhood that became a magnet for trendy boutiques, delectable restaurants and rising rents. As new condos have popped up since, the neighborhood has evolved into a vibrant destination but still retains its bohemian character with mainstays like the Double Door, Empty Bottle, Rainbow Club and Myopic Books.

During filming, a number of protesters shouted outside the "Real World" house in opposition of MTV's parent company Viacom invading their neighborhood and its overall gentrification. Cast members found red paint splattered on the front door and messages such as "I am not an actor in my neighborhood" written in chalk outside.

But the show also gave buzz to businesses, including Piece Brewery and Pizzeria, which opened across the street the same summer the show filmed.

"For us, it was obviously a good thing but also quite challenging from an operations point of view because we were just opening up," Piece owner Bill Jacobs said.

He picked that location because there was no pizza joint or sports bar nearby. "It was still a little sketchy, but we've really seen the development of a strong market," he said.

The cast often went there to eat. Cast members Tonya and Cara worked as a server and as a hostess, respectively, for a couple of weeks. The cameras followed.

"It was great and drove a big crowd wanting to get a look at these kids," Jacobs said.

Now: Even without "Real World," much attention already is being paid to the West Loop. In April, Forbes Travel Guide called it "Chicago's hippest neighborhood." In the past few years, the West Loop transformed from abandoned warehouses into pricey lofts and a foodie haven with chefs like Grant Achatz, Curtis Duffy and Paul Kahan setting up shop. And don't forget "Top Chef" winner Stephanie Izard, who opened the popular Girl and the Goat and Little Goat restaurants on Randolph Street.

"It's growing faster now than I've ever seen it before in [the] last 20 years," said Dan Krasny, owner of Vivo restaurant on Randolph Street since 1991. He said he's all for the show taping in the West Loop because it will bring more recognition to the idea that production is happening in the neighborhood housing Harpo Studios only for the next two years.

Some residents worry that the problems Wicker Park neighbors faced in 2001 when the show filmed will shift to the West Loop. Patti Mocco referred to the protesters spilling into the street and gawkers trying to get on TV.

"The consensus is we didn't want the West Loop to be labeled with this kind of crazy debauchery thing of these young adults," said Mocco, a board member of the Neighbors of West Loop.

Residents and business owners voiced their concerns at a community meeting earlier in June. MTV assured them they would be monitoring the show's cast, said Martha Goldstein, executive director of West Loop Community Organization.

Several area businesses also have expressed interest in getting involved with the filming, she said.

"It seems to me as long as they're good neighbors and respect the community, we're pleased to have them here," Goldstein said.

The jobs

Most seasons of the "Real World" have required the cast to work. We give suggestions to MTV on what jobs the cast could have in Chicago this time around.

Then: Theo, Aneesa, Cara and Tonya worked with children in a Chicago Park District program to design murals for Humboldt Park. Meanwhile, Chris, Keri and Kyle were lifeguards that summer. In the fall, they all performed at Daley Plaza in a storytelling tent for Halloween.

Now: Well, we can only guess. If they work for the Park District again, they can help clean up after Lolla. They could run errands for Mayor Emanuel, clean bathrooms at Wrigley and U.S. Cellular Field, fill potholes, serve drinks at Castaways or valet Divvy bikes.

Catching up with the 2002 'Real World' cast

What do you remember most about Chicago?

Kyle: 9/11. We were inside an empty Wrigley Field that morning doing a photo shoot when the news broke. I had loved ones in Manhattan and couldn't reach them because we weren't allowed to have cellphones. One second I was living out a childhood dream of running around that ballpark, the next second it became one of the worst moments of my life. Wrigley hasn't felt the same to me since.

Theo: I still say 9/11 because it really made what we were doing there so unimportant to me. It really humbled, I think, all of us.

Theo

How do you think you were portrayed?

Kyle: They're not worried about making you look cool, they're about making good TV. You know what's good TV? People making fools of themselves and looking stupid. ... So no, I don't think I came off well on the show. But it wasn't because it was skewed and edited. It's because I was 22 and terrified.

Cara

Cara: It's no secret I had a very difficult time with how I was portrayed on the show. ... I sowed my wild oats on national TV, and it was very difficult to watch even though I did nothing wrong.

Chris

Chris: To enjoy each day. Explore the city and get out there.

Theo: Soak it in. Take advantage of it. Utilize the opportunity because you're going to blink and it'll be over.

On being on the show:

Cara: There was a while where I was embarrassed by it and [thought], "What have I done?" Now being 14 or 15 years removed from it, now I think of it as a quirky, unorthodox thing I did.

Chris: It was a really vulnerable time in my life because I had just gotten sober. I really absorbed all of the city. ... One challenging thing for me, some people may have thought it was coming out nationally, but it was not fully understanding the nature of addiction.

Theo: I thought that neighborhood was awesome. People were nice. There were hole-in-the-wall restaurants we could go to. We could hop on the train right there.

Madzilla attacks

Boy's wish to be Godzilla comes to life on screen

Chicago Tribune

A 4-foot-tall boy became an 800-foot-tall lizard in a Northwest Side production studio Sunday, battling monsters and wreaking havoc on a miniature Chicago.

Five-year-old Maddex, aka "Madzilla," crashed in costume through a meticulously designed set that volunteers built last week as part of a Make-A-Wish Foundation project. Cameras rolled as he roared, stomped and took directorial cues in front of a green screen.

Maddex, whose parents asked be identified only by his first name for privacy reasons, was diagnosed with leukemia a year ago, and since then has been on a treatment regimen of chemotherapy, spinal taps, a half-dozen daily medications and other discomforts, his parents said.

Godzilla, whom the boy took a liking to after watching the original 1950s Japanese film at 18 months old, has been an unlikely source of comfort for him since the April 2013 diagnosis. When he was asked to make a wish, his parents weren't surprised by the answer.

"I want to be Godzilla," he replied, said his mother, Tareen.

As his wish started to take shape as a 5-minute film, the boy made a set of demands. He wanted to star in his own movie, destroy buildings, take a bite out of a vehicle, breathe fire, scare people, come out of the water and fight Godzilla nemeses Baragon and MeccaGodZilla, said Jonathan Becker, the film's creative director.

With help from miniGorilla productions producer Mo Wagdy and an outpouring of support from the Chicago film community, Maddex's wish became a reality. Shooting started Wednesday in the boy's home. His parents feared that the intensive filming process might exhaust the sick boy, but Maddex remained full of energy at the end of the long day, they said.

"It was definitely the happiest we've ever seen him," said his father, Tony.

The days that followed included four helicopter flights, shots on a boat, shooting downtown that shut down a stretch of LaSalle Street and a lot of cameos. Appearances included Mike Ditka as mayor of Chicago, Mayor Emanuel as a taxi driver and TV news reporter Maureen Maher as a news reporter, Becker said.

Becker estimates the production, which was funded with a relatively small Make-A-Wish contribution, would have cost close to $1 million without the volunteered help and equipment.

The film is set for release in late August.

Man slain after moving to Chicago

Chicago Tribune

Wil Lewis and his wife had lived in Chicago for about a year and had moved about two weeks ago to a home in Rogers Park, a neighborhood they considered "safe enough," his family said.

The 28-year-old Wisconsin native, a photographer by trade, was scheduled to start a new job Monday, a prospect he was "very excited" about, family said.

But Saturday afternoon, that all changed. Lewis was on a North Side street about 3:20 p.m. when a man walked up to him and started firing shots, police said. Lewis was hit in the back and died within an hour, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office.

"We're just numb," said his father, Joseph Lewis, of Virginia, who was reached by telephone. "I'm operating on two hours of sleep, and so is my wife. There's not a lot anybody can say. It doesn't make a lot of sense."

"Somebody basically shot him dead. [Police] felt it was a case of mistaken identity. Wil was not in the wrong."

The scene of the shooting on west Devon Avenue was less than a half-mile from Lewis' home, in the 6600 block of North Greenview Avenue, according to authorities and his family.

The shooter fled the scene on foot, police said. They were questioning three persons of interest in the shooting, and the gunman's vehicle may have been recovered, according to police, citing preliminary information.

EXPRESS LINES

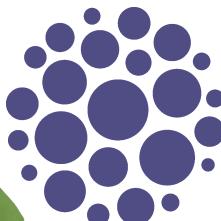

Internal investigation files for alleged police misconduct will now be made public, officials said Sunday in a statement from Mayor Emanuel's office.

As many as 40 crude oil trains, each carrying a million or more gallons of the flammable liquid involved in recent fiery derailments, roll through the Chicago area weekly, documents obtained by the Tribune show.

A 16-year-old girl was shot, one of four people injured in shootings Sunday on the South and West Sides, police said.

Thousands of Gaza civilians flee

7 Thousands fled their homes in a Gaza Strip town Sunday after Israel warned them to leave before it attacked rocket-launching sites, on the sixth day of an offensive that Gaza officials said has killed more than 166 people.

But Israel appeared to hold off on a threatened escalation of its week-old Gaza Strip barrage Monday despite balking at Western calls for a ceasefire with an equally defiant Hamas.

On Sunday, the Israeli military had warned residents of the northern border town of Beit Lahiya to leave or risk their lives when, after nightfall, it planned to intensify air strikes against suspected Palestinian rocket sites among civilian homes.

A UN aid agency said around a quarter of Beit Lahiya's 70,000 residents fled.

But other than a lone air strike on farmland outside the town, which the Palestinians said caused no casualties, Beit Lahiya was largely quiet in the early hours of Monday. Israel said one rocket was fired from Gaza without inflicting damage.

There have been more than 940 such launches by Gaza's dominant Hamas and other factions in the past week, Israel says.

It has not suffered fatalities, due in part to the success of its Iron Dome rocket interceptors, but the salvos have disrupted life in major cities, paralyzed vulnerable southern towns and triggered Israeli mobilization of troops for a possible Gaza invasion if the air campaign failed to curb Hamas.

Secretary of State John Kerry, whose bid to broker a wider peace deal collapsed in April when Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu called off negotiations with Western-backed Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas over his power-share with Islamist Hamas, offered Sunday to help secure a Gaza truce.

The call was echoed by France and by Germany, which will send its foreign minister to the region Monday. But with the U.S. and European Union, like Israel, shunning Hamas as a terrorist group, Middle Eastern intermediaries were mooted.

THE DIGIT

$7 billion

Citigroup agreed to pay $7 billion to resolve a U.S. government investigation into shoddy mortgage-backed securities the bank sold in the run-up to the 2008 financial crisis in a settlement set to be announced Monday, sources said. The $7 billion includes $4 billion in cash to the Department of Justice, $2.5 billion in consumer relief, more than $200 million to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and just less than $300 million to settle probes by five states, sources said.

Pau Gasol and Carmelo Anthony
EPA, MCT AND USA TODAY SPORTS FILE PHOTOS

FINALLY FREE!

No Melo, but at least all that waiting around is over

At last, basketball fans have closure in this whole NBA free agency soap opera. The two biggest teases, LeBron James and Carmelo Anthony, made their choices, and all without an hourlong mockery of a press conference. With that off our chest, let's dive into the Windy City's whirlwind hoops weekend. REDEYE, TRIBUNE CONTRIBUTED.

FRIDAY

1 In an essay written for SI.com, LeBron James tells the basketball world he's coming home to Cleveland. "Of course, I want to win next year, but I'm realistic. ... I'm ready to accept the challenge. I'm coming home."

Meanwhile, Chicago's thinking:

"Take all the time you need getting ready, Cleveland. Take decades for all we care. We've still got a shot at Carmelo! Assuming he values winning over a mountain of cash."

SATURDAY

2 At 4:31 p.m. CDT, Pau Gasol tweets that he's joining the Bulls. "It hasn't been easy. After meditating it a lot I've chosen to play with the Chicago Bulls. Looking forward to this new chapter of my career."

Meanwhile, Chicago's thinking:

"That's great and all, but reports say Anthony is preparing to re-sign with the Knicks. Hey look, Tony Snell scored 27 points in the Bulls' summer league opener! Carmelo who?"

SUNDAY

3 Anthony re-signs with the Knicks and takes a page out of LeBron's playbook (which, to be fair, James probably got from Michael Jordan and Tiger Woods). "I owed it to myself and my family to explore all of the options available to me. Through it all, my heart never wavered," Anthony posted on his website.

Meanwhile, Chicago's thinking:

"Carmelo, you're no better than LeBron. You'll never know how good you would have had it in Chicago. And if Josh Planos of The Washington Post is correct, Gasol's way better than Carlos Boozer." (Among those stats Planos references in his post Sunday: "Boozer averaged 2.9 assists per 100 possessions a season ago; Gasol averaged 5.2.")

NOW WHAT?

» Boozer is history. The Bulls either will trade him by Wednesday or amnesty him and his $16.8 million deal, giving them room to sign Gasol.

» Derrick Rose has won over Doug McDermott. "[During practice] he's finding a lot of us on passes we never knew could be done." McDermott said of his new teammate. "He looks healthy. ... He looked like the old D-Rose to me."

» More help is coming. The Bulls have agreed to terms with Kirk Hinrich, and 23-year-old Nikola Mirotic of Spain tweeted Sunday that he's joining the Bulls next season. Mirotic will bring even more outside shooting to Chicago.

KA-PAU!

Sorry, we couldn't resist that obvious play on words with the new Bulls forward's name. Maybe these five can.

1	So. Pau Gasol. That gonna be enough for the Bulls?	Enough to make the Eastern Conference Finals! Oh, wait.	Great addition. Once we get Melo, we're contenders. What? He went back to N.Y.? Derrick?	Mark my words, we'll be making "Bulls run out of Gasol" puns come the playoffs.	Enough to "win" the regular season and get bounced in the first round? Sure.	The Bulls need a real bull. Like in "Air Bud." But not a golden retriever. A freakin' All Star-worthy bull that can shoot the 3.
2	What was missing from LeBron James' letter marking his return to Cleveland?	The part where he made Dan Gilbert kiss his big toe for saving his franchise again?	"I love you, Cleveland! BUT I may get sick of you, so I have a one-year out clause. But I love you, kind of."	"XOXO."	"I'm taking my talents to the Mistake by the Lake."	That he's excited to play with Andrew Wiggins. Because LeBron wants Kevin Love. Because he can't do it himself.
3	Why didn't Jose Abreu want to participate in the Home Run Derby?	It would be unfair to put a pro against amateurs like that, man!	Translation miscommunication. He thought they said, "Be careful in Minneapolis, you'll get the runs!"	He didn't want to run out of gasol in the second half of the season. See what I did there?	Something was lost in translation. He said it's 'cause he's afraid of horses.	He didn't want someone representing the White Sox to continue doing what they've done well all season: lose.
4	Michael Phelps won a back-stroke race. What's that mean?	James Deen isn't the only one to get paid while laying on his back?	When a skinny tree falls in the forest...	He has plenty of gasol in his tank! Okay, I'll stop now.	He's still pretty decent at this whole swimming thing.	Not much. He was baked out of his mind and thought he was swimming freestyle.
5	Now that the World Cup is over...	... I'm sad. What a great Cup! Hopefully some of you goons watch the Fire now!	Huh? Didn't it end when the United States lost?	... Twitter can go back to talking about the Emmys and Doctor Who.	... I'll have to get my flopping fix from the NBA summer league.	... the United States can slowly regain its masculinity from the rest of the world.

I did not get gored by a bull, and I am fine with that.

On Saturday, a few thousand thrill-seekers and I participated in the Great Bull Run at Hawthorne Race Course in Cicero.

When I signed up a few weeks ago, I assumed it would be like an obstacle course where the obstacles would be fast but nonthreatening.

Then I saw the headlines last week. First, four people were hospitalized at the famed Running of the Bulls in Spain. Then Chicagoan and RedEye contributor Bill Hillmann was gored in the thigh in the Pamplona event.

This is a guy who contributed to a book about how not to get gored by bulls.

The fear started to set in because I signed up for the first heat out of six, so I wouldn't know what I was getting myself into until it was happening.

Luckily, I did not actually run with the bulls this weekend.

In the first heat, dozens of us were ushered onto the track and given red bandannas to wave. The course was difficult to walk on, much less run, because of heavy rains earlier that day.

An MC instructed us to stand along the track fences and wait for the bulls to be released in three waves. When they got to you, you were supposed to run.

He cautioned about stray bulls because those are more dangerous than those in the group.

The countdown began, and whoosh, the bulls were released. They got to me, and I started running—into other people. There were so many people on the course and not enough time to process how close you wanted to get to the bull that indecision caused confusion. Plus, bulls are quick. They don't wait for you.

By the time the second wave was released, I was more prepared. Then one strayed from the pack. It slowed down and weaved, creating more chaos. I felt a person next to me start to climb the fence. I just sort of stared at the bull, which moved on without incident.

Then the third wave came and whoosh, the "run" was over. I think I ran a few feet in all.

I got to be near some bulls, which felt both exciting and odd. But this was not Spain.

I watched the second heat and saw a guy move toward the center of the course like he wanted to be trampled by a bull.

One participant was hit in the leg by a horn and suffered swelling, the Tribune reported.

No thanks. Next time I want to be chased by a Bull, I'll call Joakim Noah.

We're seeing a trend here. For the second straight World Cup, it took a goal late in extra time to decide the winner. A brilliant strike by Mario Goetze in the 113th minute lifted Germany over Argentina 1-0 on Sunday in Rio de Janeiro. Goetze settled a pass in the box with his chest and, before it hit the ground, rocketed it past the goalkeeper with his left foot. In 2010, Spain topped the Netherlands 1-0 on a goal in the 116th minute.

MIXTAPE MINI-REVIEWS

BY ERNEST WILKINS | REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Several notable Chicago rappers have released mixtapes in the past few days. Here's how they fared.

King L

King L
Tony

Despite being one of the brightest stars of Chicago's nationwide rap boom in 2012, landing a deal with Epic records and being featured prominently on Kanye West's "Yeezus," King L has struggled to find mainstream acceptance. The talented rapper (formerly known as King Louie until a dispute with Disney) hasn't seen the hype bestowed on acts like Chief Keef and Chance The Rapper, even though those artists haven't put out nearly as much material as King L. On "Tony," the local superstar deftly weaves gut-busting punchlines while proudly repelling his hometown with lines like, "My city influence the country/Can't get away from Chicago/They ask, 'Louie, you gon' leave?/Nah, Ima stay in Chicago." "Tony" continues to prove why King L deserves more attention.

Best songs: "Day," "G.O.D.," "Sheesh," "Live & Die in Chicago"

Lil Durk
Signed to the Streets 2

The only good thing about Lil Durk's (left) recent, now-squashed feud with L.A. rappers Tyga and The Game is that it seems to have rejuvenated the Chicago rapper. He revealed in an interview that the incident inspired him to release "Signed to the Streets 2," a sequel to last year's well-reviewed predecessor.

before focusing on his Def Jam debut. Unfortunately, the tape's highlights are overshadowed by a bloated tracklist and repetitive themes.

Best songs: "Ten Four," "Fly High," "I Made It"

Sulaiman
The Mogs

A compilation of eight songs recorded between 2012-2013, "The Mogs" finds Sulaiman (of Treated Crew) bringing out a real All-Star team on this tape. In fact, with appearances by Chance The Rapper, The GTW, Mic Terror and GLC, it's hard to believe these records have been sitting on the shelf so long. While not all of the songs achieve equal impact, this collection is solidly packed with great rhymes and showcases Sulaiman's widely underrated ear for good beats.

Best songs: "Farm And Foolies (feat. Chance The Rapper)," "Damn Girl (feat. Caleb James & Highlife)," "Don't Care (feat. Paul Scientific and the GTW)"

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Cancer June 22-July 22

Saturn is reminding you that you crave a companion who will connect with you in mind, body and spirit. If you're involved with someone and you feel that's missing, focus on finding a deeper level within your relationship.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

Jupiter moves into your sign this week, and it will stay there for a year. This marks a spiritual power time for you. Many of the things you were working toward for years will finally start to come together, including romantic matters.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

A moon opposition could put you in a funky mood. Chances are there is something you have been avoiding, and you need to take care of it. Resolve old issues from your last relationship.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

You need to learn how to play within certain boundaries. If your honey has to work crazy long hours, don't pressure him or her to change that schedule just to suit you. Mars says be more understanding.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

Don't assume your partner is being unfaithful or that friends are out to get you. The moon could be making you paranoid. Chill out and relax. Chances are those negative fantasies of yours bear no relation to reality.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Friendly Jupiter will give you a much-needed dose of positive energy. Those progressive vibes will last for about 12 months. This is a great time to let go of unhealthy relationships or toxic situations.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

As Venus moves opposite your sign for a few weeks, you're questioning the foundations of a relationship. If you got involved with someone while that person was still married or seeing someone, those issues could resurface.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

Jupiter is moving opposite your sign, which means you could be experiencing some powerful and intense transitions through 2014 and into the first part of 2015. If your living situation or relationship aren't working, change them.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

Someone could flirt with you out of the blue, and you'll appreciate the positive attention. Sometimes you don't realize how charming and sexy you are, but this person will remind you that you still have "it."

Aries March 21-April 19

Step back and make sure you really know what you're doing in your love life. You could be on the brink of rushing into something that might not be so healthy. The moon says use caution.

Taurus April 20-May 20

Rules and regulations don't mean much to you. You could find yourself lustful after someone at work despite your company's policy against interoffice dating. Saturn has you pushing the envelope and potentially getting into trouble.

Gemini May 21-June 21

As an intellectual Air sign, you're filled with ideas and opinions. And when your honey doesn't agree with you, you can come across as cold and unyielding. Mars is warning you against being too harsh with your partner.

Former Cub Ryan Dempster shows off his World Series ring on Saturday at Howells & Hood.

LUIS GOMEZ/TRIBUNE

Dad time well spent for Dempster

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

» @TribLuis

in this city has a photo with the Stanley Cup trophy, but a picture with a World Series ring? You'll be the envy of your Facebook friends. The valet hands Dempster the keys to what is most likely an impressive car, and now you need to make a decision. You're not sure you'll have this opportunity again.

Do you approach Dempster? In this case, you can. Dempster says so.

"I enjoy sharing it with people," Dempster said Saturday at Toast the Champ for 22q—a Dempster Family Foundation fundraiser at Howells & Hood to raise awareness for 22q deletion syndrome. "It's a great, special thing for me. I want them to get a feel for what it's like and what it looks like. I don't wear the ring every day, but I wear it a lot, like when I go out to a nice dinner."

Dempster, 37, played 16 seasons in the major leagues, nearly nine with the Cubs. The father of three announced in February he would take the year off to spend more time with his family and focus on his health.

Dempster's daughter Riley was diagnosed with 22q two days after she was born; it affected her speaking and breathing and led him to get involved with the cause. Now he gets to spend the time with Riley—and his other children, Brady and Finley—that he wasn't able to while playing baseball, whether it's wearing tiaras during dress-up time or unintentionally learning the words to "Let It Go" from Disney's "Frozen."

"[You learn] just how fast kids grow up," Dempster said of his time away from the game. "When you're playing baseball, you're gone for a week, and when you're home, you're busy the whole time. I got to chase my goals for a long time, and now I get to watch my kids chase theirs."

Besides spending time with his kids, the two-time All-Star has been traveling and appearing on MLB Network as a studio analyst for a few days each month.

"When you get the camera in front of you, you feel like you can say you know it all because you played it," Dempster said about his MLB Network gig. "But you have to stay humble and remind yourself how hard the game is to play. I approach it that way. My mentality has always been positive. I'm not the type to rip a guy. [Players] say I'm doing a good job. I don't know if they're blowing smoke up my dress."

Dempster said he occasionally misses the camaraderie in the locker room. But other than that, he's at peace with his decision. And while he hasn't closed the door on his career, he said he hasn't had the itch to return either.

"Fortunately, I haven't missed it," Dempster said. "Not yet. With the way things ended with the World Series, I don't feel like I'm missing it. Hopefully I don't ever get that feeling."

GYM, TAN, DIAPER CHANGE

Looks like they'll have to replace that hygienically questionable beachside hot tub with a nursery. "Jersey Shore" cast member Jenni 'JWoww' Farley and her fiancee Roger Mathews welcomed their first child, a girl, on Sunday, eonline.com reported. Little Meilani Alexandra will no doubt have plenty of playdates with godmother Snooki, who's expecting her second little meatball this fall, to look forward to—she'll be fist-pumping in no time.

Party foul

Oh no he di-ent. Everybody's favorite "Hills" star/toolbag Brody Jenner (to be fair, he has some competition—we're looking at you Speidi) ditched stepsister Kim Kardashian's May wedding to Kanye West and yet was all up on Instagram posting pics at the nuptials of Kim's ex, Reggie Bush, Saturday, according to Us Weekly. The mag's sources claim Jenner opted out of Kimye's over-the-top Italian festivities when he didn't score a plus-one for girlfriend Kaitlynn Carter. Ouch.

'Careless and negligent'

Tracy Morgan has filed suit in New Jersey against Wal-Mart after one of the retailer's semis crashed into the comedian's limo-bus June 7, killing comic James McNair and seriously injuring Morgan and several other passengers. The 45-year-old "30 Rock" star has been released from a rehabilitation center where he was recovering from his injuries, his rep confirmed Saturday, and he and other plaintiffs are seeking a jury trial and damages, eonline.com reported.

Diva damage control

Apparently that adorable, drunken "Bennie and the Jets" duet from "27 Dresses" didn't have the intended endearing effect on the rest of the world, because rom-com vet Katherine Heigl has earned herself something of a bad rep. THR.com reports the former "Grey's Anatomy" star responded to critics who have dubbed her and momager Nancy "difficult" to work with Sunday, saying, "If I have ever disappointed somebody, it was never intentional."
